Featured Speaker

Amteshwar Singh, MD, M.Ed., SFHM, FACP

is an Assistant Professor of Medicine at the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine and an academic hospitalist at Johns Hopkins Bayview Medical Center. He serves as Director of Medical Education for the Division of Hospital Medicine, Associate Program Director for the Internal Medicine Residency, and Program Director of the Hospital Medicine Fellowship.

A passionate clinician-educator, Dr. Singh has dedicated much of his career to helping learners become better clinical thinkers. He leads the Diagnostic Reasoning curriculum for the Internal Medicine Residency and has broad scholarly interests in diagnostic reasoning, competencybased assessment, psychometrics, and the development of rigorous approaches to medical education research.

Dr. Singh earned his medical degree from Government Medical College in Amritsar, India, and completed his Internal Medicine residency through the Johns Hopkins-Sinai program. He subsequently earned a Master of Education from the Johns Hopkins School of Education, where his scholarly work focused on psychometric analysis and assessment validity. He is currently pursuing additional graduate studies in psychometrics and educational measurement at the University of Illinois Chicago.

Nationally, Dr. Singh is actively involved in several major organizations in medical education. He serves on the Society of Hospital Medicine Education Committee and was recently appointed to the APDIM Survey and Scholarship Committee as well as the ABIM Item-Writing Task Force for the Internal Medicine Certification Examination.

He has delivered invited presentations nationally and internationally on designing rigorous surveys and strengthening the quality of educational research. Most recently, his work in this area was recognized with the Society of General Internal Medicine’s David E. Rogers Award for his workshop on survey design.
